■ WASHINGTON AND LEE'S Military Department underwent its annual formal Second Army inspection April 24. A five-man inspection team, all members of ROTC staffs at other colleges, spent the day meeting with school officials, attending classes, inspecting facilities, and examining supply and administration procedures. Climax of the inspection was a review of the cadet regiment, commanded by Theodore M. Kerr, of Midland, Texas.

The inspection team was composed of Col. Kenneth A. Cunin, Ohio State University; Lt. Col. George W. Eason, Dickinson College; Maj. Cecil M. Curles, and Capt. Lawrence E. Butler, University of Dayton; and CWO Stacy C. Harris, John Carroll University.

■ WASHINGTON AND LEE university, a school not universally noted for its military curriculum, nevertheless staged its first annual Military Ball on March 15. The ROTC unit and the local chapter of Scabbard and Blade planned the event, which featured the music of Woody Herman and his orchestra.

The evolution of Army dress from the American Revolution to the present time was the decorative theme. Murals of soldiers in various uniforms of American wars hung from the walls in Doremus gymnasium.

Members of the 450-man ROTC unit at the "West Point of South Letcher Avenue" attended the ball in dress uniform, and other students and faculty attended in formal attire.
